LONG LIVE COUNTRY MUSIC

Tribute to Country Music

About

LONG LIVE COUNTRY MUSIC is a two-hour country cover show built around current hits, classic staples, and a cast that shifts between multiple artists across the set. It is not an impersonator show, but the performers do reflect the looks, voices, and personalities of the singers they portray.

The set draws from a wide range of country favorites, covering modern material from artists including Lainey Wilson, Jason Aldean, Cody Johnson, Miranda Lambert, Brooks & Dunn, Brad Paisley, Carrie Underwood, and Luke Combs. The aim is broad country recognition, with songs from dozens of artists packed into a continuous, fast-moving performance.

A sit-down acoustic segment changes the pace midway through the show. With the cast gathered in a circle onstage, it focuses on country legends and musical history, with tributes to artists including Merle Haggard, Hank Williams, Willie Nelson, Alabama, Charley Pride, Johnny Cash, Toby Keith, Garth Brooks, and George Strait.

The show also makes room for real up-and-coming national and regional country artists performing short headline segments of original music. Collin Donley is named among those featured. Ronnie Lee Keel hosts the show and adds his voice, music, and presence to every concert.

There is also a patriotic thread in parts of the set, especially during American country anthems that are designed to land on an emotional level with the room.

The backing band is based in Las Vegas and centers on Scott Woodward on bass, vocals, and bandleader duties, with MacKenzie Kerr on drums, Brian Shute on guitar, and lead guitarist Jason Haven, a longtime veteran of Keel's touring and recording band.

A free meet and greet follows each performance, giving audiences a chance to meet the cast and take photos.
